THE REMORSEFUL CAKES.

A little boy named Thomas ate
Hot brown bread cakes for tea—
Very rash proceeding, as
We presently shall see.

He went to bed at eight o'clock,
As all good children do,
But sooner had closed his little eyes,
When he most restless grew.

He dropped on this side, then on that,
Then looked up at his head,
And covers all at once each spot
Of his wee troubley head.

He wriggled one leg around his waist
And another round his ear,
While mamma wondered what on earth
Could all her little dear.

But sound he slept, and so he slept,
He dreamt no awful dreams
Of being spanked with history slabs
Without the power to scream.

He dreamt a great big lion came
And nipped and raved and roared—
While in his heart two furious bulls
In mortal combat gored.

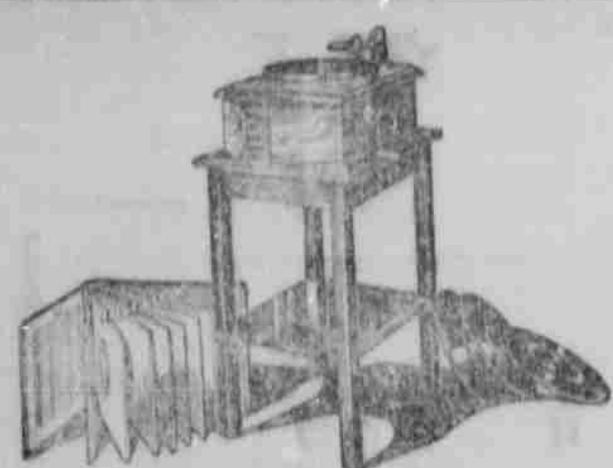

He dreamt he heard the flop of wings
Within the chimney-flue
And down they crawled, to gnaw his ears
An awful anguish!

When Thomas saw next morn his face
Was puffed as a sheet,
"Inconveniences, my deary said,
"Will take for supper eat."
